

Kid Power

RandomKid

The Power of ANYone

YOU can make a difference!

- LOCALLY...

YOU can make a difference!

- OR ACROSS THE WORLD...

The original Random Rockstar

RESULTS: $10 million

- -Talia convinced a Midwest grocery chain to put her message on 8.5 million trick-or-treat bags and on 4.5 million print ads in 221 stores in a 7-state region.
-
- -The governor of Iowa agreed to hold a press conference with Talia, and at her request, emailed the other 49 governors across the nation to support her project.
-
- -Local, national and international media outlets picked up story, including TODAY SHOW (2x), CNN, MSNBC, ABC World News Now, FOX, NPR (2x), and newspapers across the country.
-
- -In the end, $10 million was raised by kids, and kids' organization across the nation for hurricane relief, reported through Talia's website.

-The organizations that benefited from the effort include the American Red Cross, Habitat for Humanity, UNICEF, Oprah's Angel Network, Heart to Heart and the Clinton-Bush Katrina fund.

-$250,000 was given to hurricane relief specifically in name of T.L.C.

-Talia held the first ever national conference call of kids across the nation, at the 5 million dollar mark, representing over 5,000 schools. Hurricane survivor children were also on the call.

They celebrated the 3-month total by singing "God Bless America" with each part of the country singing the verse that related to them ("from the mountain" was sung by the mountain states, etc.)

Newburyport girls making a difference in Cambodia

Leah Petty and Claire Miller are not like most 13-year-old girls. For the past three years, the Newburyport girls have been raising money for the children of Cambodia.

Leah Petty and Claire Miller are not like most 13-year-old girls. For the past three years, the Newburyport girls have been raising money for the children of Cambodia. Petty, who lived in Singapore, visited Cambodia for the first time and was touched by what she saw.

"It really struck me how people were living here," said Petty. That fateful visit made Petty want to do something to help. She contacted a group in Cambodia called Journeys Within Our Community, and contacted a friend back home in the US, and that's when the ball was set in motion.

We are so amazed by Leah and Claire," said Ross, of JWOC. "To be so young, yet to be able to really embrace the idea that they can make a difference in the world. It's very inspiring and they embody everything that JWOC stands for: To see a problem and to solve it!"

To raise money Petty and Miller have had countless bake sales. Also they have made magnets and sold photos they took of Cambodia while they were visiting the country. Two weekends ago, the girls had a yard sale to raise money for Cambodia. Thanks to generous donations from family and friends, the girls raised over $1600. To date the girls have raised over $4000.

Petty, who just moved back to the States, is thinking about throwing a pool party in her back yard. "I have a pretty big back yard," said Petty. "We could have a band playing and to come in everyone would have to pay five dollars or something. I am still thinking it out."

Petty encourages everyone to get involved and to help Cambodia or any third world country. Petty is a true believer that every little effort makes a difference. "Anything you do will help them. They have so little. They will appreciate it."

Caine's Arcade

- A 9 year old boy - who built an elaborate cardboard arcade inside his dad's used auto part store - is about to have the best day of his life.

About being a visionary, an entrepreneur, believing in yourself, and helping others have fun!

Caine's Arcade

